Lord MANSFIELD'S celebrated SPEECH

on the second reading of the bill for the farther preventing delays of justice, by reason of privilege of Parliament, after the 24th of June 1770.*

MY LORDS,

WHEN I consider the importancy of this bill to your Lordships I can not forgive it has taken up so much of your consideration. It is a bill, indeed, of no common magnitude; it is by that alone to take away from one third of the legislative body of this great kingdom certain privileges and immunities of which they have been long possessed. Perhaps it may be found that the houses have still other privileges which call for the same remedy, as where it is made a ground for the writ of error. There is something unpleasant in the mode of proceeding by the sanction of privilege even obtained, when the plaintiff succeeds either by attack with peremptory or sudden reply, which I have often held to be the hardest of all human trials. The more reason your Lordships have to take every precaution, and I doubt not but the wisdom of your counsels will prevent the worst from all hazard and future use to consider taking the house will meet your Lordships.

Privilege then must be restrained to all acts, and to all persons. The question is founded in antiquity, and ground is the necessary attendance of members of parliament upon the business of their constituents, the due discharge of which duty requires a freedom from all legal arrests. I am sensible that I am treading upon tender ground. I know the jealousy with which every encroachment upon this privilege is viewed by the house, and I should not have ventured to have touched upon it, but that I am supported by the authority of your Lordships' own resolutions. I shall only say a few words to some noble Lords who foresee much inconveniency from the purport of their servants being liable to be arrested. One noble Lord observes that the coachman of a Peer may be arrested while he is driving his master to the House, and consequently he will not be able to attend his duty in Parliament. If this was actually to happen, there are so many methods by which the member might still get to the House that I can hardly think the noble Lord is serious in his objection.

Another noble Peer said that by this bill one might lose their most valuable and honest servants. This I hold to be a representation in terms; for he neither can be a valuable servant, nor an honest man, who runs into debt which he neither is able nor willing to pay until compelled by law. If any honest, by misfortune misfortune, has got in debt, and I felt myself easy with him, I certainly would pay the debt; but upon no principle of honesty should I scruple wherever the law exempts him from a suit, to take the advantage, whether for forty shillings only the limit of the exemption, or more from the penalty and locked up in a jail. It is said that I [illegible] I cannot myself, however, the determination of this day will materially put an end to all such partial grievances by putting [illegible] upon a more equitable footing.

I come now to speak upon the bill. I would [illegible] proceed, but I see [illegible] with the day. [illegible] hand, that I should not [illegible] upon our good and [illegible] I have [illegible] of the noble Lords who [illegible] to the question. I beg [illegible] of my life whose [illegible] of the court may [illegible] decided by my [illegible] I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The next day Colonel Murray, Colonel Gerrish, Mr. John Adams, Brigadier Preble, and Mr. Samuel Adams, were appointed a committee to consider the same, and report.

In the afternoon Colonel Murray, from the afore mentioned committee, reported, as their unanimous opinion, that his Honour's message did not afford that light which the House requested in their message to him; and that it appeared to the committee, from his Honour's message, that he was restrained, by instruction, from communicating the same to the House, in a parliamentary manner.

And therefore that an address and remonstrance be prepared in answer to his Honour's message of yesterday, and a committee be appointed for that purpose, to report as soon as may be; whereupon Mr. John Adams, Mr. Samuel Adams, Mr. Hancock, Mr. David Ingersoll, and Mr. Bullin, were appointed.

Then the House entered into a consideration of the afore mentioned report of the committee, on his Honour's speech to both Houses; and upon the question being put, whether the House do accept the report, it passed in the negative.

It was then moved that the question be put whether the House will proceed on the publick business in the town of Cambridge; and after debate, a motion was made that a committee be chosen to prepare a petition to the following purport, viz. That it is from necessity only that the House proceed to business; and absolutely necessary only that the House proceed to business; and also to prepare a protest against the restraint they are under to hold the same at the town of Boston; the same to be entered on the journal. In consequence of which motion Mr. Wood, Mr. Ingersoll, Brigadier Preble, Mr. Samuel Adams, and Major Read of Marblehead, were appointed to prepare a petition and protest accordingly.

[illegible] the Honourable Board of Representatives at Cambridge, [illegible] Tuesday last, agreed to proceed to business [illegible] days.

At a meeting of the merchants in this town, at the British coffee-house, it was unanimously voted to stand to non-importation agreements, and to open the importation of goods from Great Britain, except tea, and such other articles as are or may be subject to duties for the purpose of raising a revenue in America.

We have [illegible] new appointments for governors of his Majesty's colonies in North America, viz. His Excellency Governor [illegible], to Nova Scotia; His Excellency Governor [illegible], to the province of New Hampshire; &c. Hon. Brigadier [illegible], governor and commander in chief of the province of New Hampshire, and Captain General of New York, for the southern provinces; and [illegible] Esq; governor of Quebec.

RUN away from the subscriber, in Hanover, a very likely mulatto fellow named CHELTER, about 5 feet 8 or 10 inches high, something of a reddish complexion, full eyed, rather thin visaged for so sturdy a fellow, his hair has the appearance of wool, which he comes mostly combed back, and was about three or four inches long. He carried with him an old brown broadcloth coat, a green jacket, three white shirts, two hats, and sundry other clothes, very suitable for carrying on the cheat of a pretended freeman. It is probable he will change his name, and direct his course towards Tar river, in North Carolina, as he had a wife, some time in April, sent there. He rode away a very likely dark bay gelding 4 feet 7 inches high, with a hanging mane and switch tail, several white spots on his rump, and some on his back, occasioned by too constant use of the saddle. He has a brand on the left buttock hard to be discerned, and at full sight appears like QD. He paces but slow, trots very fast, and gallops strong. Whoever brings me the horse and fellow shall have for the fellow alone 10 l. and for the horse 20 s. reward.

These articles were appraised, in December 1768, to 2738 l.
